NOON

director's notes

This film is a humble observation.

In the post-communist country - Bulgaria, the social system is out of order. Many old people live on the edge with just a few euros per day. Some of them still believe in the purity of the communist idea. That's why some of their relatives don't like to have conversations with them.

These old Bulgarians have breakfast, lunch and dinner. And that's all about it. The rest is long long waiting. Waiting for time to pass away, listening to the silence and staring at the nothingness. Life happens somewhere behind the door, far away, unreachable...

I believe the problems should be shown to the society and this is the way to get more hope for everyone. The little ant in this story appears to be a metaphor of this hope that every God's creation deserves.
